GW Experts on the News

ISSUE: Peace negotiations should include experts in resolving conflict

EXPERT: Dr. Gordon L. Lippitt, professor of behavioral science and internationally known management consultant, teaches a graduate course in conflict resolution which studies international, national, organizational, group and individual conflict.

"Conflict--that is fighting, hostility and controversy--can be a positive force," says Lippitt. "Without it we don't change, grow or progress as countries, organizations, employees, couples or individuals. No country, office or marriage can mature without conflict, but we have to change the way we feel about conflict. It's not to be avoided; it's to be confronted and resolved."

Contact Lippitt at 676-6471 or 320-4409

ISSUE: Women shifting away from Reagan and the Republican Party

EXPERT: Dr. Susan J. Tolchin, associate professor of public administration, is author of the book, Clout: Woman Power and Politics.

"Reagan makes Carter look like Susan B. Anthony," Tolchin says. "Women are coming to realize that Reagan isn't working for them. Whether they will be bought off by one Supreme Court appointment remains to be seen, but I think they will vote in a bloc in the next election."

Contact Tolchin at 676-7019 or 530-8443

She is currently working on another book on the politics of deregulation.

ISSUE: Space shuttle to build manned space stations by the end of the decade

EXPERT: Dr. John M. Logsdon, director of GW's Graduate Program in Science, Technology and Public Policy, and newly appointed to the National Air and Space Museum Chair in Space History where he will complete a book on U.S. space policy. He is one of few scholars studying space policy.

"A space station is the next logical thing to do," says Logsdon. "There is some reason to be optimistic about a program to build a permanent facility. New programs have always been announced during a change in administrations. But such a goal is far from assured. The debate within the administration over what to do in space is still underway, and it could turn out that President Reagan and his advisers will be skeptical about another big project."

Contact Logsdon at 676-7292.

ISSUE: Elections in El Salvador cause nervous reaction among U.S. allies

EXPERT: Dr. Cynthia McClintock, assistant professor of political science, has lived in Latin America, and visited many countries there.

"Unfortunately the result of the recent elections in El Salvador," she says, "was to seriously complicate and undermine the Reagan administration's position with our allies who were already nervous about his policy. If we continue to support the Salvadorian government, we will further alienate our European allies and a variety of Latin American countries."

Contact McClintock at 676-6589

ISSUE: Crisis of understanding developing between U.S. and Japan

EXPERT: Dr. Gaston J. Sigur, professor of international affairs, is director of GW's Institute for Sino-Soviet Studies

"The U.S. and Japan have been enjoying a close and mutually beneficial alliance relationship for the past 30 years," Sigur points out. "This alliance is now in danger because of problems in trade and national security. If these differences are allowed to grow and become magnified, the entire fabric of U.S. policy in the Asian and Pacific region will be torn."

Contact Sigur at 676-6340.

ISSUE: Scientific freedom under attack

EXPERT: Dr. Mary M. Cheh, associate professor of law, was moderator of the Symposium on Scientific Freedom vs. National Security at the 1982 annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Scientific freedom--the freedom to think, to learn, to conduct research, and to report one's findings--is considered so essential to our liberty and well-being that we are willing to tolerate restrictions only for the most obvious and compelling reasons," she says.

POSTERS BY DISABLED CHILDREN ON EXHIBIT AT GW LIBRARY

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Like other students across the nation, children from Washington's Sharpe Health School took an active part in National Library Week. Unlike most elementary school students, however, those at Sharpe are disabled and their efforts special, as reflected in the posters they made on the theme "A Word to the Wise--Library." The posters are now on exhibit in George Washington University's Gelman Library, 22nd and H Streets, NW.

According to Dean of Students and Friends of the Libraries Special Events Chairman Gail Short Hanson, "Friends" chose Sharpe Health School because "for us, attention to the problems and needs of the handicapped didn't end with last year's International Year of the Disabled. We have an ongoing commitment."

The colorful, imaginative posters will be on display through April 30. In addition, the Friends of the Libraries will present Sharpe Health School with a special gift in appreciation of the children's efforts.

SHERBORN BROTHERS WIN GW NATIONAL

LAW CENTER MOOT COURT COMPETITION

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- J. Charles and Thomas Carlson of Sherborn recorded a first at George Washington University's National Law Center (NLC) recently when they won the final round of the Van Vleck Moot Court Case Club senior competition, becoming the only brother team ever to do so. Both are second-year law students.

Each brother received the Jacob Burns Van Vleck Moot Court Award of $100 and an engraved medallion to commemorate the event. The awards are made each year through the generosity of Dr. Jacob Burns of New York, a 1924 graduate of the law school who established the awards to encourage more student participation in the competition and improve the quality of the presentations.

GW Experts on the News

ISSUE: Nuclear war: its implications for survival or suicide

EXPERT: Dr. Homer B. Sewell, professor of engineering administration, is a former project engineer with the Atomic Energy Commission and a project director for the Minuteman intercontinental ballistic missile system.

"A near term U.S.-U.S.S.R. freeze on development and production of nuclear weapons might enable us to contain and gradually resolve this unique threat to the survival of civilization. Continuation of the nuclear arms race can only lead to nuclear holocaust. We are literally confronted with a choice between survival and suicide."

Contact Sewell at 676-3795.

ISSUE: Nuclear war and radiation problems

EXPERT: Dr. Stefan Schiff, chairman of biological sciences, is an expert on radiation problems associated with nuclear war.

"Radiation exposure, no matter how low, produces detrimental effects, even if such effects can not be demonstrated statistically. Even the types of radiation to which we are exposed frequently, such as diagnostic and therapeutic x-rays, are not necessarily safe under all circumstances."

Contact Schiff at 676-6090.

ISSUE: Can the U.S. wage a non-nuclear war?

EXPERT: Henry Solomon, Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences and professor of economics, lectures on economic topics of current interest such as economic activity analysis and risk and uncertainty.

"Unless America effects new policies governing the efficient, effective employment of its natural resources towards national security, this nation will not be able to carry on a conventional, non-nuclear war. Rising costs and excessive lead times on military vehicles have put us in a position where our industrial base is unprepared."

Contact Solomon at 676-6210.

ISSUE: Moral and religious perspectives on nuclear war

EXPERT: Dr. Harry Yeide, chairman of the Department of Religion (676-6325)
Dr. Max Ticktin, assistant professor of Hebrew (676-6328)

ISSUE: Will the British/Argentina situation lead to military force?

EXPERT: Dr. Marvin Gordon is director of the Latin American Studies Program.

"Argentina does not have enough people to mount a sizable proportion of the population for military forces. The proportion of the population of youthful age is lower than the rest of Latin America, and military losses couldn't be replaced."

Contact Gordon at 676-6187.

ISSUE: Reagan threatening to cut funding for education of handicapped children

EXPERT: Dr. Jane R. Snider, assistant professor of special education.

"The Justice Department is trying to narrow the definition of who is handicapped. That means children whose handicaps are visible may continue to receive some services, but children whose handicaps are subtle will be mainstreamed, without support staff, to regular classroom teachers leaving them less time to devote to the 'average' or 'above average' child."

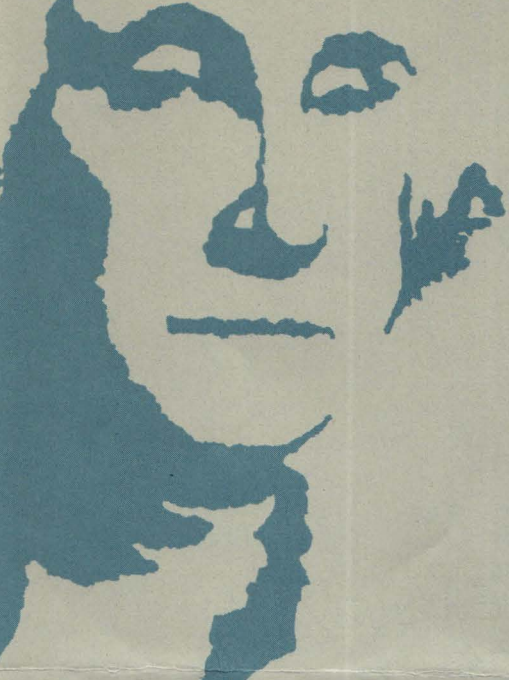

Contact Snider at 676-7329.

ISSUE: Student social consciousness not lost to the '60s

EXPERT: Lela Porter Love, assistant director of the Division of Experimental Programs and instructor in clinical law, has long focused her career on the community--especially those who have little contact with lawyers or who cannot pay exorbitant fees for legal services. She has been instrumental in the progress of GW's small business clinic and in placing volunteer law students as part-time teachers in District of Columbia public schools.

"In this era of rising tuition costs and student loan cuts, it is not only surprising to work with law students who teach ninth graders the basics of law--it is inspirational. I fell into the trap of being cynical about the social consciousness of today's students. When 40 volunteered their limited spare time, it was a revelation."

NEW UNDERGRADUATE PROGRAM IN POLITICAL COMMUNICATIONS
OFFERED AT GW

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- A new interdepartmental undergraduate program leading to a Bachelor of Arts in Political Communications begins in fall 1982 at George Washington University.

The new program recognizes the increasingly important role of the news and communications media in American life. It gives students a solid grounding in political communications with a curriculum encompassing analytical and production skills, knowledge of the political process and the policy setting, and the dynamics of political learning as they relate to television, radio, newspapers, film and interpersonal communications. Those who complete this program will have a good foundation for graduate work in a variety of fields.

The new program utilizes faculty resources and experiences of the departments of political science, journalism, and speech and drama, as well as other departments offering relevant courses and the TV News Archive in the university's Gelman Library. These resources, along with GW's location in the nation's capital, create a distinctive opportunity for an integrated combination of courses in a crucial new area.

For more information contact Philip Robbins (202) 676-6225, William Adams (202) 676-7449 or Robert Lichter (202) 676-6392.
